

Commentary on the Gospel for Sat, Apr 14th 2012

When Jesus was dead, his disciples had nowhere to go. They had no future. They must have slumped into terrible depression. They returned to their former way of life; they tried to go back to fishing. But “they caught nothing that night.” They had no future and they did not even have a past; they had nowhere to escape to. That was what made them capable of receiving the Good News, which is for Now.
