Opening Prayer

Lord our God,
we know that Jesus came for everybody, yet he wanted to find back the very one given up by people:
the tax collector, the sinner, the prodigal.
Do not allow us in our zeal for what is right and good to lose sight of this one person who was written off by people, yet who merited the special concern of your Son,

Jesus Christ our Lord.

Liturgy of the Word

First Reading Introduction

The heart of the gospel and of Christianity, of the Christian community, of the Church – and therefore of the life of every Christian – lies in living for one another and somehow belonging to others: to God, to our neighbor, in love, mercy, mutual help, forming God's community, and celebrating this in our worship. Even our death, like that of Christ, should benefit others.

Gospel Introduction

The whole chapter 15 of Luke deals with people who have lost something and find it back: a man finds a lost sheep, a woman a coin, and a father his son. All are extremely happy at the end, except the brother of the lost son. This joy expresses Jesus' attention for all that is lost, rejected, devaluated in the eyes of people. Like Jesus, we have to keep looking for these people and to rejoice when they come back to God and to people.

Commentary

JESUS tells two stories, out of three in a row about a lost sheep, one out of a hundred and the shepherd leaving the one hundred to their own protection and going after the lost and wandering one. And another about a woman losing a coin off her dowry belt and searching high and low for it and calling a party with her neighbors to celebrate finding it (and keeping the belt from continuing to unravel). This is the way the angels rejoice and God delights in finding one who is brought home. The story is told at a party with sinners who have come back, while those who don't want to eat with 'them' overhear the story. Who are we? Self-righteous and indignant, not wanting to be reminded that we have all been lost and the invitation to eat at the table of Eucharist goes out to all, but in accepting forgiveness we must forgive one another-all of us and eat together. Jesus, forgive us our spitefulness, our arrogance and inflated images of ourselves. Draw us all into your company of sinners lost and found. Amen.

General Intercessions

- That leaders of the Church and of society may not lose themselves in chasing after power, prestige and wealth, we pray:

- That the Lord may give to his Church shepherds who care very much about people who go astray and try to bring them back to the Lord, we pray:

- That in our communities we support one another in trying to live the life of Christ, we pray:

Prayer over the Gifts

Lord our God,

let your bread and wine remind us of our solidarity even with all those who live on the fringes of society.
You love them and they are part of us May we speak to them the encouraging word for which they are waiting May we too look for them and love them with our Lord Jesus Christ, your Son and our Lord for ever.

Prayer after Communion

Lord our God,

your kingdom is not the private domain of those you have given the grace to find you and to believe in you.
May we care with you and search with you for the weak, the embarrassed and the timid, without any attitude of superiority or condescension Help us to be a community in which there is enough space for everyone for human growth and dignity for all.

We ask you this through Christ our Lord.

Blessing

God looked for us and found us because he loved us long before we were aware of it. We know he loves all and wants all to belong to his kingdom. May we help anyone to find the Lord, with the blessing of almighty God, the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit.
